Carolyn's practice involves high-stakes civil litigation and class actions, representing individuals and corporations on a wide range of matters. She has worked with high-profile clients in navigating complex international legal issues, and has experience in bankruptcy, environmental litigation, intellectual property law, international corporate disputes, patent litigation, and crisis management.

While a law student, Carolyn interned for the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York and spent two semesters as a student attorney at the Pace Environmental Litigation Clinic, for which she delivered two oral arguments and won the White Plains Bar Association Isaac Rubin Clinic Lawyering Award. Prior to law school, Carolyn spent a decade as a journalist.
